

Across

3. links on a Web site that let you jump between pages.
7. the name of the server that holds all the Web site information, such as microsoft.com.
9. the chip that controls your computer.
12. also known as the Web, this is the collection of specially created pages on the Internet viewed in a Web browser.
13. ensures that you can send and receive information over the Internet.
15. on a client/server network, this is the computer that holds all the information and resources.
17. software that flashes advertisements across your screen while another program is running.
18. the amount of information a connection can transfer at any one time.
19. an older Ethernet architecture, still common in small businesses and home networks.

Down

1. a program that organizes all the information saved for a Web site so you can find the information.

2. computers on a network that contact the server to get information.
4. the space used to distribute air for ventilation in buildings; cable for this area must be plenum-approved.
5. a single length of cable runs between computers, which are configured in a ring.
6. the structure, or how the network is laid out. This is usually dependent on the network architecture.
8. equipment that connects a computer to the Internet via a phone line.
9. once the industry standard, coax cable is similar to that used by the cable company.
10. someone who gains unauthorized access to your computer system for the purpose of stealing or destroying data.
11. every computer that accesses the Internet is assigned this number, consisting of a series of four numbers.
14. a connection device that links two different types of networks.
16. a small program that copies itself and interrupts the computer or the network.